W597 Adamas CVT

Any guitar maker who's ever altered "The Sacred Design" for the sake of a better performing instrument will tell you - it's a long lonely climb to public acceptance.

But what if you built a guitar that exceeded it's traditional forerunners in every way. Wouldn't you be willing to make that long, uphill climb?

Adamas has been building such instruments since 1975. Because of the high cost of the material and technology, production has been very limited. But recent carbon fiber manufacturing breakthroughs have changed all that.

Now more guitarists can afford to play an Adamas. That's an exciting state of affairs!

We believe in these guitars. Instant popularity be damned. We know that, if necessary, we can win guitarists over one at a time. The truth is that we know we've found a better way. Ultimately the truth is not based on what you read, but what you experience.

Play an Adamas... the truth is the truth!

1597 Adamas SMT

Ever play a grand piano with the lid lifted? A similar sonic "openness" is how players describe their first SMT experience.

That's largely due to the material we use to make the soundboard of the SMT - unidirectional carbon fiber actually have a grain direction, much like a fine piece of spruce.

And while unidirectional carbon fiber shares many of spruce's favourable acoustic characteristics - lightness, vibrancy - it's much stronger. A thin slice of fine spruce is comparatively weak. It has to be heavily braced to keep the top from caving in to the stress of the strings. Unfortunately this structural bracing also kills sound. Not so with the SMT. Unidirectional carbon fiber allows us to build an instrument that virtually eliminates the weak notes and dead spots that you've come to accept as 'normal'.

Play an Adamas SMT. The musical possibilities will be nothing short of shocking!
